I havent mounted it yet, so I can not comment on its ability to hold zero on a highpowered rifle, but it has great visibility in very dim li.The problem came when I began sighting in the rifle. I first bore sighted it then took it to the range. On the third.I have it mounted on my weatherby rifle.The Bushnell Banner has very good clarity all the way to 24X. Bushnell has a great product and I would recommend it to anyone. It is mou.

I mounted them on DNZ mounts which are perfect and had other scopes on them previously with no problem. Neither one of these scopes will zero on a. Big deer travel the edges, both of terrain and darkness. Big daddy's going to be walking it. Shoot straight and hell never cross it. Did you miss your activation email I purchased the scope as a refurb from OpticsPlanet for 139 bucks and it literally arrived in 2 days. Very fast service on their part I might say. As for packaging I was less than impressed as it was simply in a plastic bag in a scope box, no instructions, no manual, just the scope and flimsy, 1 string scope lens cover. There was no padding or even cardboard in the box which had me worried about possible damage during shipping. I mounted the scope on my .25 Mrod that night and the following day had it zeroed at 60 yards within 5 shots. Very impressive in my opinion. Now, on to the specs. Lens and Clarity of focus at different powers 1. I noticed that up to 18 that clarity of the reticle and the background were very good. Once at 2024 there was some change in clarity but not enough to significantly affect your ability to see your target. 2. Eye Relief is about 2.

75 inches which is very nice for my needs. I prefer to be set back a bit further for my own comfort so it works out just right for me. Pics As Follows. Just asking because somewhere even maybe here I read a quoted letter from a Bushnell tech and he said all AO scopes were springer rated. Of course a scope this powerful might not be suited for a springer anyway. Curious thats all. Many have had luck with them. Just my opinion as it is a review of MY thoughts of the scope. Matt I wish I was in the states to take advantage of a sale like that, looks like a good buy for sure.
